Betrail.run is designed to collect results of trail-running competitions and similar events, and for trail-runners to share their passion by lots of different ways.

Access to the Betrail website (hereinafter « Betrail ») is only permitted subject to acceptance of these general terms and conditions which Betrail shall, however, be free to modify at any time. Unless we make a change for legal or administrative reasons, or to correct an inaccurate statement, a notification may be sent to the user by e-mail.

4. Recognition of events as trail running races

The recognition of a timed running event with a ranking as a “trail running race” is the sole responsibility of Betrail. Generally, Betrail recognizes a running event as a trail race on the following conditions:

- The race is completed by participants in relative autonomy. For example, a running event with aid stations every 3 kilometers is not a trail-running race.
- The course should be designed by the organizers to visit beautiful spots of the region where the race is organized.
- Natural obstacles (slopes, rivers) are not systematically avoided, on the contrary.
- The proportion of the distance covered on roads and paved surfaces is minimized, and single-tracks are preferred.

5. Accuracy of information

Betrail uses publicly available information and information provided to Betrail by registered betrail.run users. In general, betrail.run aims at publishing the official results of the race, as provided by the race organizer. However, Betrail reserves the right to publish different results, in case it is justified to better conform to reality.

Betrail users will only provide accurate information about themselves and others to betrail.run.

6. Betrail performance measure and Betrail algorithm

Betrail uses a mathematical algorithm to measure the performance of a race result, as expressed by the betrail score, expressed in %.. This algorithm is described in general terms in the FAQ section of betrail.run, but its precise description is kept secret. Betrail reserves to right to modify this algorithm at any time, without notifying betrail.run users.

7. Personal Page and race results

Betrail tries to automatically attribute results of a new race to runners already in its database. In case a mistake is made by Betrail during this automated process, a registered betrail.run user can claim a result for himself, or remove a result from her/his personal page.
